Chillin

Lounging at the J.T.S.U lawn, many students take part in a free barbeque. Even though students may have meal plans, the atmosphere is something not to miss. Also on a student budget, a barbeque comes in handy.

Good eye.

Concentrating very hard, Mad Chad Taylor entertains the student body. These types of events are appreciated by students and continue year in and year out.

No comment!

Interviewing some students, Dan Diggins gets the inside scoop. It is important for students to be able to express their thoughts and for their voices to be heard as a part of the open market place of ideas.

Full of EXcitement!

Eating, Walking, and Experiencing

During this time students are getting back for the new year, friends get together and hang out as well. The publications staff with other organizations have their own welcome back barbaques and kickbacks. Again, this is a time to let loose and hear the stories from the summer. The university hosts many activities that students take part in to meeting new people and being able to start the school year off with a bang.

Hmmmm!

Getting ready for the new school year, these students are cooking hamburgers. All the people here are involved in publications for students. Before getting into the stress of deadlines, having a barbeque is a good way to relax and have a good time.

Hungry, why wait?

Getting a bite to eat, these football players wait for their food and kick back. The university backs it's students and makes sure that when they come back for the new year that they don't go hungry.

HOMECOMING EXcellence

Float your Boat

Which float has what it takes to win?

With the festivities of Homecoming week, building that top notch float is one of the most creative of the rest of the activities. This is a time for students from organizations to get together and build a float out of diverse materials. Hours upon hours of labor are put into these floats while the students bond together and see what they have built. Normally the supplies are donated or things that are just lying around in the garage. Magically, these materials are turned from junk into a masterpiece. After all of the preparation the floats are driven down Virginia Street on Friday night. From there they compete against each other to see which one is the top dog.

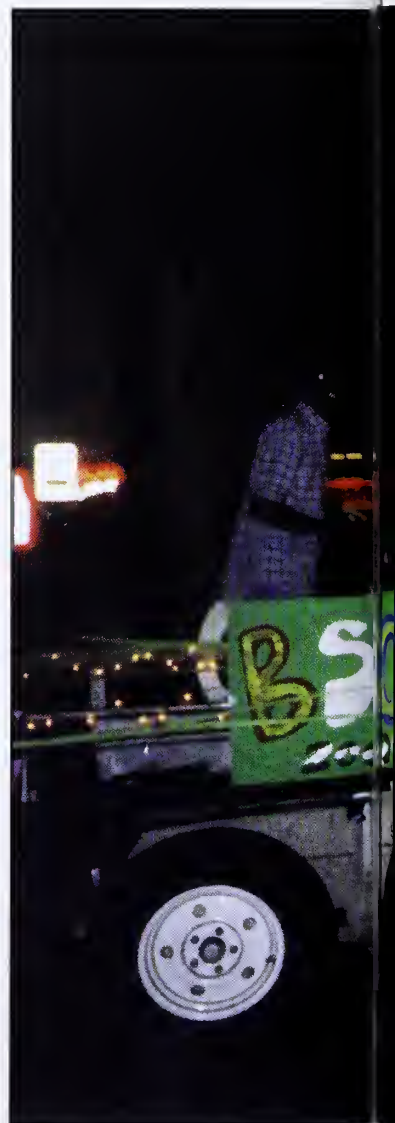

Bling, Bling!

While this float shines with bright lights, Miss UNV candidates practice her wave awaiting to win.

Wow!

Having a unique shape, the people that built this float hope their creativity will give them first place. Lots of time and effort are put into these floats and getting rewarded for your hard work is self satisfying.

Look at this.

Going to the extreme, the Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity builds a great float. Everyones input and ideas come together to put of the final product.

Peace.

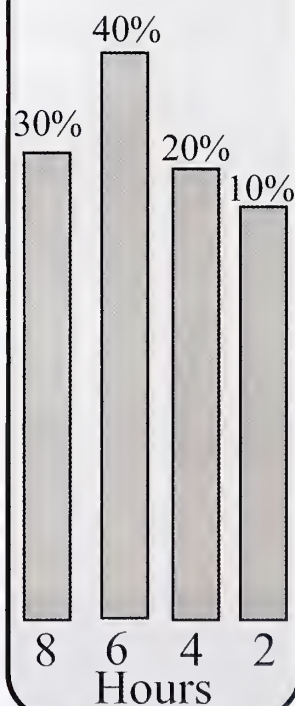

Decorated with a variety of things, this float is automobile operated. Each float has its theme that makes it different from the rest.

Good job.

This smaller float is definatley different from the rest. When going to buid a float some-times students may not have a choice on what materials to use. Usually it's whats available at a low cost. No matter what materials are used, students imagination is a big key when making floats.

How much time did it take to make your float?

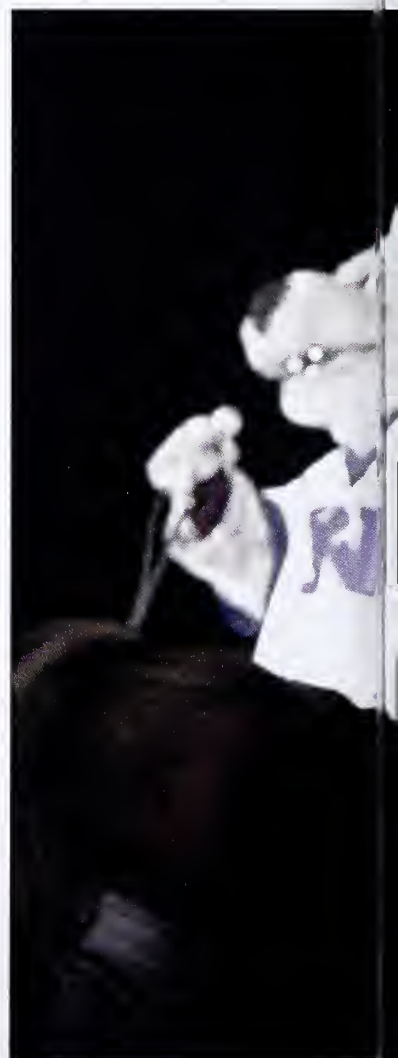

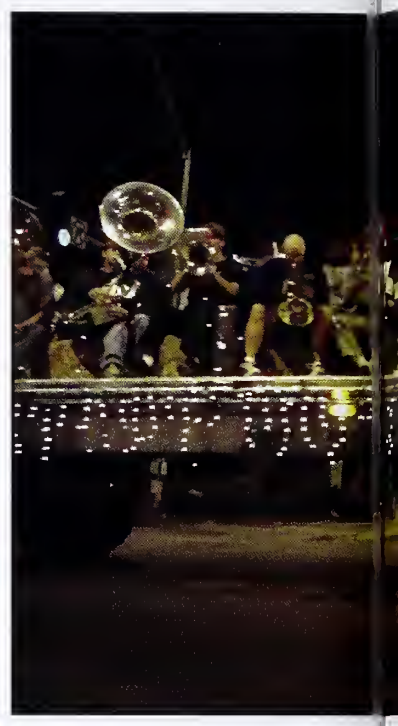

Getting rowdy!

Dancing around, these female rugby players are going all out down Virginia Street. Being enthusiastic and representing your float well, is a big part in displaying your float in the parade.

Out of this World.

Going with a space shuttle float theme, the SAE Fraternity and Pi Beta Phi Sorority show how working together you can get a great final product.

How did you like the 1st annual parade of lights?

Last year was cooler.

What parade? where's the pizza?

"The girls dancing were awesome."

"I loved it!"

Listen up.

The old Wolfie and newly named Alfie mascot, attempts to pump up the student body by giving them a pep talk. Alfie is a big influence on campus making sure that the students know how great it is to be part of the wolf pack.

Parading the Night.

Lights, Music,

A night of lights, glamour, and glory occurred during the first annual parade of lights on Virginia Street. Many organizations participated in showing off their school spirit. There are competitions for who has the best floats, but being able to go out on the town gave students an experience to remember. Many events occurred from rugby girls dancing in sarran wrap, to the bonfire, to a spectacular performance of skits.

Proud to be an American!
going down the street, these students show their american pride.
It's good to see students freely express how they feel.

Pay a toll.

Having their float on this truck, these students make sure to keep their balance. It's good to be ener-

Royalty.

Ymmm. Burger.
Food is a big part of the Tailgaters. This student helps out by making hamburgers for the eager crowd.

So much to do, so little time... Let the Fun Begin!

Many students remember those strange mornings when they rolled over in bed and woke up to the sound of horns and woodwinds blaring through the bedroom window. They were the warm up tones of the marching band announcing the arrival of another football Saturday. Students that live within six blocks of the stadium were roused this way, tumbling out of bed to see swarms of cars in the streets, nearly all of them waving "N" flags and sporting Nevada decals in their windows.

Students and visitors alike all took part in the great tradition of American Football- the tailgate. "The tailgaters are by far my favorite part of the football season, when else can you just wake up and start drinking without anyone giving it a second thought," said Jolie Alhadeff a senior journalism major. "It is simply one of the best excuses to drink that I have ever heard." Tailgates took place all over the campus where housemates, parents and friends were all mingling around the backs of cars and heating up grills. Smells of hotdogs, cookies, chips brownies, and pocorn drifted in the air. Food spilled out of trunks and the band played while University students and friends waited for kickoff, often with beer in hand. As if on cue the tailgaters looked at their watches packed up their trunks and swarmed toward the stadium to take their seats in the big house.

Royalty.

The Homecoming court of 2002 pose for a picture at half time of the football game. Not everyone can win and with a bunch like this the judges probably had a very difficult time picking the winners.

Slash the Spartan

Students get an opportunity to take out their aggression on this dummy dressed up as a Spartan. Here these boys take a wack for a Pack victory.

Great Pretenders.

the ASUN Programming board snaps some shots as they make sure the king and queen crowns will be suitable for royalty.

Frolicing.

The BSO performs a skit at the annual Wolf's frolic. Every organization has an opportunity to construct a skit that is fun for all. It is hard for some to perform in front of a crowd but the BSO shows no fear as they take the stage.

All the Kings Horses.

Pumped Up!

The Cheerleaders get jiggy as they introduce Alphie to the crowd and begin the Wolf's frolic. These ladies are members of the all girl squad that recently replaced the dance team.

Pre-game Rituals.

A Programmer mans the grill at the Homecoming Tailgater. Students gather in the parking lot before the game to enjoy burgers and beer before entering the game.

All of these things are mere preparations for the most important part of the whole week....

The Game Of Course! Or Maybe

What is your favorite Homecoming activity?

Get Loud!

The captains of the football team give the student body a speech to ensure them that the pack was ready to kick some serious butt in the upcoming game against the Spartans.

Exceptionally Diverse

As a college town, Reno charm could not really be attributed to any one thing, but it is for sure that UNR certainly has a diverse group of students attending it. The University's campus featured old, young, hippies, yuppies, rich, poor; one would be hard pressed to find a group that is not represented here. Students strove to find their place within a student body that was anything but homogeneous.

Ethnicity, socioeconomic status, religion, and sexual orientation were but a few of the characteristics that set one student apart from the next. A multitude of fiercely guarded world views, lifestyles and customs were represented and practiced with regularity. "I never hung out with just one group of people my freshman year and that made my college experience more rewarding" said Jeff Redlinger, "Reno is just a more worldly crowd that is full of diversity."

Kestra Kreticha glances at the information station in hopes that she can find an exciting event or new local hot-spot. This is a place any student can go to catch up on all the college events.

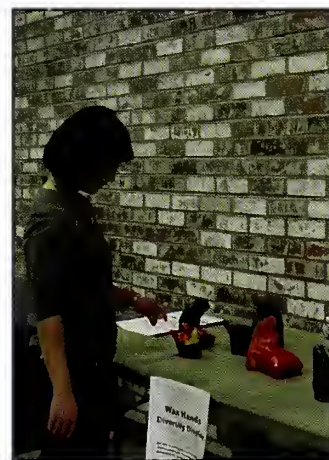

Strolling along. Students walking to class can enjoy the beautiful change in the seasons. Fall is one of the best with the reds and browns.

Day of the Dead. This exhibition was put on MEXA to celebrate Day of the Dead, in October. At the Student Union students can get a different taste of culture.

Display Diversity. Students were given the opportunity to make a wax sculpture of their hands. Then they were displayed in the JTSU to show all the diversity of our school.

All the Leaves are Brown

Soak it up. Taking the beautiful weather Chad Cooper reviews a paper in front of Thompson's Studenty Services.

Most students would have agreed that autumn is the most beautiful and exciting seasons in Reno. Not only were the cooler temperatures a welcome break from the extremes of Nevada summers and winters, but the coming of autumn marked the beginning of the new school year and all the activities that went along with it.

"Autumn in Reno is fun because there are so many things to do like going to parties, tailgaters, and football games," said Clauding Ellyin a senior environmental engineering major. "And it is a good atmosphere because everyone is eager to catch up on all that went on during the summer with people they haven't seen."

The milder fall weather drew students outside to study, nap, and visit with friends. The upper and lower quads are an ideal place for jogging, picnics, or any other outdoor activity. The JTSU became increasingly crowded with students playing instruments, people watching, and engaging in impromptu games of Frisbee and football.

On a stroll. Both walking to class, Sara Cook and Megahan Johnsen stop in the quad to have quick chat.

Meditation Time. Under a huge shade tree is a perfect place to relax and meditate, students Kate McCune and Neil Puckett agree. "This place is great for studying," states, Puckett Leaves are falling. Toward the end of the season the roses are no longer in bloom, but the rose garden is still a beautiful place.

Taking a break. Jennifer Long tops from her daily routine to lie down and relax in the quad.

Boots were made for walking. As Jessica Miller walks through the quad to her car, she takes time to soak up the autumn weather.

Lounging around in the lower quad. It's a perfect place to get some study time. You can lie on a bench or on the ground.

Unex~~x~~pected Devastation

fickle weather, fickle times

The weather has been responsible for many devastating storms all over the world. Many of us are brought close to these storms through movies like Twister or Wizard of Oz. In these movies Hollywood mimicked the best wind havoc they could possibly create. However, on December 14, 2002 Northern Nevada was struck with some pretty serious wind damage itself. The Reno community was able to have a first hand encounter of the winds destruction power. With 80-mile winds, rain, and snow it was an amazing and crazy experience for all. Students ran around frantically as a tree in Manzanita bowl was uprooted, businesses were shut down, and streetlights were in frenzy.

Even the motorists were not spared from the storm wrath as street signs sailed through the air in all directions. "That storm was so intense, but that is how Mother Nature works," exclaimed Jolie.

People were urged to stay home and schools around the area were closed. However, the storm continued to capture any and every object that crossed its path and pelt those items at houses and buildings. Many of us went to sleep thinking we might be carried away to Oz, but we managed to make it through the night despite the storm. Much to our disappointment we woke up to a winter wonderland instead.

University student took advantage of the daft storm by hitting the slopes to ski/board on the fresh powder that was left behind. Nevertheless, many students were not surprised by the randomness of the Reno weather. "The weather in Reno is very fickle and can go from good to bad in 2.4 seconds," said Molly Moore a senior education major. Yet like all things we must ex~~x~~pect the unex~~x~~pected.

For students longing to satisfy their sense of adventure, the Study Abroad Program gives the opportunity to live and learn thousands of miles away

"Well all I can say is that studying abroad in Spain was truly a life-changing experience. So much so I am planning on moving to another country after I graduate to experience another culture to further my adventurous side." said international business major Nicole Nazarechuk. She first went abroad the second semester of her junior year.

"One great thing was the festival of San Sebastian. Everything closes for the weekend and all the people come together to celebrate. I felt like the whole city was out for the festivities. Everyone gathered at the Plaza in Parte Viejo where the party began. The streets were just crammed with people everywhere. Hundreds of men were dressed as cooks and solders. They all had drums and beat a rhythm that made the crown jump and sing. Everyone was joyous as the drummers made their way down the street. The drumming went on all night and into the next day. It was one of the most amazing things I have seen in my life!"

What Time Is It?

Study Time Break

Between home, libraries, cafe and restaurants, students had a number of choices suitable for any kind of studying. Most students found University libraries the most logical places to end up. Nevertheless, with all the different places to study, students are forced to find the atmosphere for them. Senior business major Nicole Nazarechuk finds the COBA labs her favorite because "There is so many resources for business students there it is hard to go anywhere else." However, for the late night cram sessions that occur during finals the Pine Lounge in the JTSU is the best place to go. With a variety of coffee and snacks that are provided by the JTSU employees until 7:45 the next morning, this was the ideal place to pull an all-nighter.

Access to a car gave students more of an option of place to go, allowing them to venture to other areas in the city. George Wara a senior English major likes to go to Borders Books to study.

"The atmosphere there is so great and I can escape some of the tension that inevitable builds from hours in the school library."

Brian Rivera goes to the Pine Lounge for a little bit of lunch.

Amber Stenovich corrects papers in front of the library.

Richard Johnson completes his accounting homework in between classes.

Examining the Campus

All over campus, students are doing their own thing.

From East to West, and North to South students all over campus all pass the time in between classes differently.

For example, some students fill their time by going to one of the many campus eateries to get a cup of coffee for the caffeine intake they need to last throughout the day. Others can be seen using their free time for exercise purposes, like biking or skateboarding. Or perhaps students choose to spend their time debating and discussing interesting philosophies, or fighting off evil ninjas. Another mode students use to pass their time is often enjoyed by pulsating rhythms bouncing into their brains via electronic devices. Popular music selections range anywhere from Weezer to Run DMC.

Finally the most popular method, but perhaps not the most favorable, is the last desperate attempt to finish what's required for class. In those few desperate moments before class students try to cram every last bit of knowledge into their brains, hoping that little bit more will further their academic achievements.

Lost in a book. It's often hard to find a good place to read, but in the upper quad you can get some real quiet time.

Get to class. Vanessa walks into class with coffee and a forced smile.

Ninjas are coming. Takashi Maser and Alvin Gotan discuss the evil Nazi Ninja Invasion and now they plan to protect themselves.

Making the grade. The quad is a great place for students to hurry up and finish their assignments.

Rock in mind. Walking into the journalism building, Ian McCallister listens to Weezer's "Only in My Dreams".

Academics

Our purpose for coming to this University was for an education.

We found enjoyment in the extracurricular activities, but first and foremost, we came to Reno to be students.

Graduate student instructors made large classes seem less intimidating and gave our education a more personal feeling.

We struggled through the 8:00 am lectures, and we stayed up all night studying for our finals. In doing so, we were given the opportunity to enrich our education and to study with many of the most brilliant minds.

Our efforts went well rewarded as we were given the educational enlightenment that will stay with us for the rest of our lives. This University has given us the best gift of all, an opportunity for us to think for ourselves and form an opinion about the world at large.

United Students

The Jot Travis Student Union is the center of campus activity. Student can purchase their books, grab a bit to eat, watch TV, or even use a computer. Basically everything a student would need to survive a year of college. The services they are numerous it basically fuels most campus events. Students use it day in and day out. So there has recently been the question of whether or not the student tuition fees should be raised in order to make the JTSU bigger and bigger.'

So the dquestion then is does the JTSU need to be bigger? Kristi Wise a senior Bio-chemistry major thinks, "The student body is growing because of the Millenium Scholarship, so I think we need to start planning for the growth in students." On the other hand, as Kyoko Tada a senior Interior Design major points out, "It is a fine size, there is already plenty of things it contains and I don't think it needs anymore addedd onto it." Since it seems that there are mixed opinions about the expansion of the JTSU we will just have to see what the final decision the Student Body President makes later in the year.

Computer craze.
While finishing an assignment these students discuss computers.

Tech talk. Student Damian Sinnott works on a computer and discusses technology.

Empty stomach. Before class Nicole Nazarechuk stops to get some food and coffee.

Picking a book. While in the library this student looks for a specific book amongst the plethora the facility offers.

Making copies. On her way into Wolfspark, Hiroko Fuzija runs into friend Doug Nguyen.

Everyone's an Artist

feeding the inner artist

Few people on campus can say that they followed their dream. Many had dreamed it, most would continue to dream about it, but only a few students have actually followed through with their dream of becoming a musician. The heavy demands of being a university student precluded many from pursuing the idea of forming a band, but not these students. These students are very dedicated to their pursuit of a music career and spend almost every free second they have writing music or practicing their instruments. It is a tough career path to take and many individuals give up at the first of criticism, however, it is possible through a tremendous amount of hard work and devotion like everything in life.

Nightingale Concert Hall is the sanctuary for most musicians that are seeking a degree in music. Here they have all the resources they need to construct masterpieces and professors to keep them striving for perfection.

Strumming away. Soaking up the atmosphere, Steve Cormier rocks out on his guitar. "Playing one guitar is my favorite thing to do," exclaims Cormier.

Making adjustments. Taking a break from playing, Ruben Garcia jots down some changes.

For the cause. Just chilling, Tactano Evangelista plays for anyone who will listen.

Live music. At the Nightingale Concert Hall you can catch a great live performance.

Dorm Life with the new Nye Hall built it gives more students a chance to experience the dorm life.

Rebuilding

a new improved campus

Nevada is growing at an exponential rate. We just recently received another seat in Congress because of the increase in our population. Also there is a new college in Henderson to compensate for the large residency. Nevada is currently facing. So naturally the oldest campus in Nevada would also be in the process of expanding to be up to date with the state as a whole.

The University just picked up the whole Post Office building and simply placed it another spot in order to make room for another dorm expansion. The UNR student acceptance rate is quickly climbing and those students of course will have to have some place to so the University must build more dorms.

Changing times is perhaps another reason for a remodel. For instance to Medical School's new library to indemnify for all of the new technology that is forever being discovered. The technology world is constantly changing and being redefined and therefore the University needs to do so as well.

Campus nightlife. More students went to party at the little Waldorf after it was remodeled.

Better buildings. With the new Medical Library students will get a better learning experience.

Disappearing buildings. You may have thought you were seeing double but really the post office was just moved to a new location.

Filling up after a fabulous breakfast Cody Hermansen leaves the dining commons with a smile. "They have a nice variety," he states

Luncheon Date?

Students eat when chance allows

"My cell phone is a crucial part of my life. I feel so lost and out of touch without it."
Tyana Ugarte

When lunchtime rolled around, many students had breaks in their day that allowed them to study, nap, hang out with friends or -most importantly- to get food. Towards the middle of the day, the Union and most of the restaurants around campus are flooded with hungry students looking to grab a quick bite to eat before heading back to class.

For Andy Socha, a senior education major, lunch breaks were the most important part of the day. "I try to make sure I have a break-somewhere in between 11 and 2-just to grab something to eat," he said. "I would say give yourself as many breaks as possible; you don't want to overwork yourself. You've got to give yourself a break to eat."

For environmental engineering major Jason Wagner, however, lunch breaks were left to chance. "it's just kind of random; however my schedule works out," he said.

"My schedule gives me a two hour break right at lunch time," said business senior Josh Hayes. "I always eat lunch at that break in the schedule, because my next chance to get food isn't until 5:30."

Convenience often played the biggest role in students' choices of where to eat. "I used to eat breakfast, lunch, or dinner at the Burger King in the JTSU just because it is in the center of campus," said Wagner. "For the quickest and simplest the JTSU is the place to go, I go there all the time."

Similarly the others agreed that the quickest and easiest food could most likely be found in the JTSU because they have the fast food stations along with the Cellar and the Crossroads Dining Commons.

Schools of Thought

Our university offers a curriculum that requires students to take mandatory diversity and capstone classes, to ensure that the student body is given a glimpse into the world at large instead of limiting the educational experience to purely Western thought. Adding a much needed touch of multicultural education to our normal school of Western thought.

"Multiculturalism teaches tolerance," said Colleen Boyle a senior business major. "Multicultural education celebrates the racial, cultural, and ethnic diversity of American citizens," she said. "It demonstrates that each distinct group has its own value and warrants respect," Boyle explains. "Furthermore, through multicultural teachings, students learn to relate more effectively to individuals, whatever they're racial or ethnic origin."

However, there are some individuals who do not think that a multicultural education is necessary. For instance the University also makes Western Traditions a mandatory part of the curriculum as well. "We must not diminish America's Western tradition," said freshman communications major Kate Young. "For over two hundred years the tradition of Western Europe has served as the cornerstone of American education," Kate said. "Multicultural education diminishes the importance of American democracy, its origins, and its institutions."

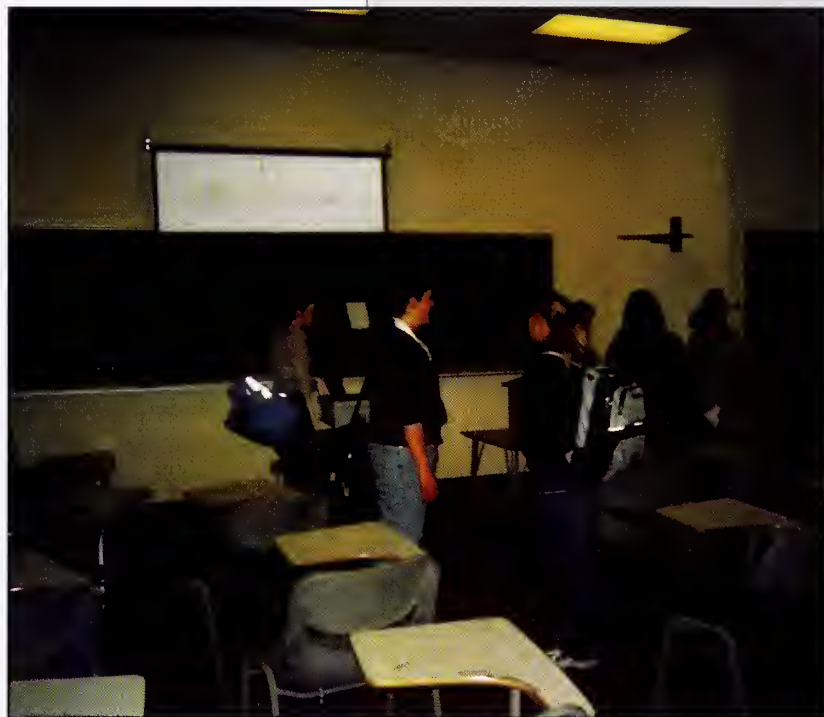

These Philosophy 394 students leave the classroom after a heated debate about Native American autonomy and what the U.S should do about the Native American people.

Natalie and Nisha engage in an after class debate to take care of some unfinished business in their women's studies/political science class.

After their women movement class student gather to ask the teacher questions and bring up more interesting ideas.

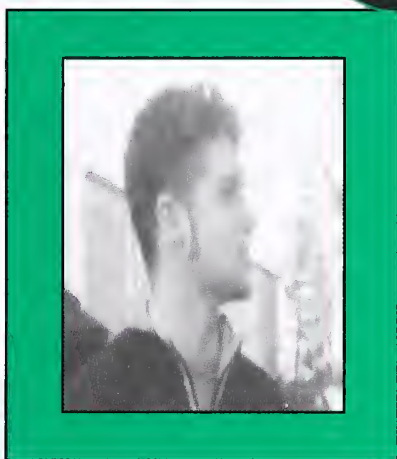

Working hard after class, Todd prepares more arguments to present to the next class to dazzle them with his intellect.

Clubs and Organizations

One of the advantages of going to an ever growing university is the sheer number of ways to get involved on campus, it was difficult to find something that did not catch our attention.

We were greeted early in the year by the Club Fair, the time where campus organizations set up booths on the JTSU lawn, giving us the opportunity to find the group the suited us best.

Whether we were activists, budding politicians, dancers, philanthropists or writers, we found the group that changed our lives and inspired us at the University.

Groups like the Lacross Team and the Rugby Team gave us a chance to release energy, while Campus Greens and Student Ambassadors encouraged us to help others and the world.

Student Government allowed us to voice our opinions and make tangible changes in the way the University operated.

The University offered us the opportunity to enrich our minds, but the organization that gave us invaluable experiences and fostered leadership in us are what made our experiences the most memorable.

Organizational Excellence

From here to there clubs are everywhere

Clubs at our University have a large range of interests. From political to athletic the organization around our campus provide the students with such a variety of subject that it would be difficult to not find one to dive in to.

Clubs enable students to make new friends and share ideas. However, in a club, like the Rugby team the experience is much more since they bought the old Gamma house. This club gives its members a place to stay and an excellent opportunity to have.

Other clubs offer students a way to reach out to their community and really give a helping hand. For instance the Student Ambassadors provide numerous services to the community with things like reading programs and fundraisers.

Then there are the clubs that are brought together because of a special interest. For example the Campus Greens brings people together based on similar interests. They hold many vegetarian bake sales for the vegan students on campus. Also they are working on great ideas to help the environment.

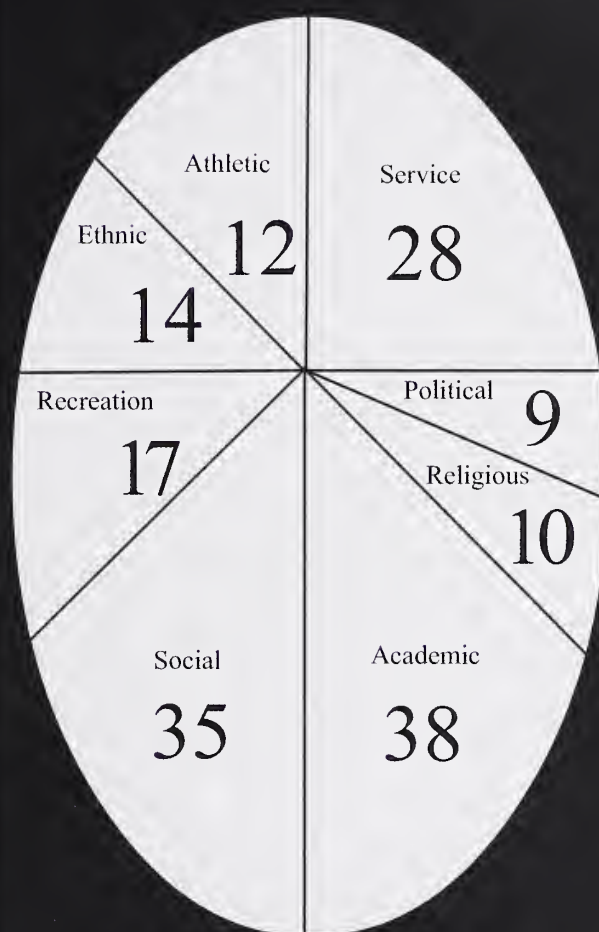

The campus organizations have an abundance of services, interests, and advantages. They are open to all students and encourage students to join at any time. So don't waste time there is an organization for you to get involved in today.

A Club for all Seasons

Everyone's an Artists

Beauty is in the eye of the beholder. Beauty can be found everywhere if one is simply willing to take an opportunity to notice it. Art is the same way because everyone can be an artist, in some way, if they merely attempt to create it. The word art has evolved to have a much more liberal meaning. The idea of art has grown into something that is quite multifaceted. Today it seems that almost anything can be considered a work of art.

"I don't like the word art," explains George Wara a senior English major. "It is used so freely now that it has lost much of its meaning and importance to me," he said frowning his brow. "There should be a higher standard for things to be considered art, or art itself is going to suffer."

"Take time to notice beauty," Ralph Waldo Emerson. "I like that quote a lot because I think that beautiful things come in all shapes and sizes," said freshmen Samantha Lagdon. "There are no set limitations on beauty so there should not be set limits on art because it is measured by its beauty."

EXceptional beauty is all around!

The JTSU hosts many peices of art. Like this one they are all unique and beautiful in their own way. Love it or hate it this peice, that could be little fire works or it could be sperm, nevertheless it is surely one that everyone stops to look at.

Can anybody find me a club to join?

At the beginning of each semester all the clubs and organizations take a spot on the lawn in front of the JTSU and recruit new members. The festivities are of course accompanied by a delicious BBQ and refreshing beverages. However, this year there was a catch. Before students were able to feast on the buffet table they had to talk to at least four clubs. This was to ensure that it was a day for the clubs instead of just an opportunity for free food.

Among the clubs was the Black Student Organization. Their efforts can be seen all over campus as well as all over the community. They are just one of fourteen groups on campus that has an ethnic purpose to go along with the social and service purpose they also fulfil.

Another club pictured is Hillel. They are a group on campus with a religious purpose. They serve the Jewish population of our University so that they can discuss and interact with other students in the Jewish community.

Finally the Cast n Blast Club. This club is one of the seventeen recreational clubs we have on campus. People from all walks of life that enjoy hunting and fishing are welcome to join .

"MEXA does a lot of positive things for the students and the community. I am proud to be a part of such a beneficial organization"

Omar Gomez

Don't Be Just Another College Student

There are numerous ways to become involved at the University without even trying that hard. For instance pictured here is Delta Sigma Pi the business school fraternity. With this club members are welcomed to join and improve relations with fellow class-mates and discuss new thoughts and ideas in an open discussion with people that have career goals similar to your own

Another group pictured is M.E.X.A a club for the Mexican Americans that attend the University. Earlier in the year they put up a beautiful display for Day of the Dead in the JTSU. They provide a number of services to the community as well as provide a wonderful social environment where people can just be themselves.

Finally pictured is the Native American Organization. This club has an ethnic purpose to accommodate to the Native American students at the University

Culturally E~~X~~posed

The Asian American Student Association of the University of Nevada, Reno is a student group dedicated to the understanding of Asian American awareness in our community. We are dedicated too building lasting relationships through shared experiences while furthering Asian American culture. We strive to dispel negative Asian-American stereotypes through education and outreach. Our goal is to provide support in all areas of cultural awareness involving students, faculty, and the community in exploring and critiquing current Asian-American issues.

AASA is an organization comprised of about 40 undergraduate students. Throughout the year, members participated in a number of events. In October, Flipside brought Margaret Cho, a Korean-American comedian to our campus. In November, AASA took a trip to Stanford University for AASA annual Asian-American awareness conference: Listen to the silences had a table during International Education Week's Small World Coffee hour. Socials during the year include bowling, dinner, movies, and ice-skating.

AASSA will also be participating in the Night of all Nations. Perhaps the most important off all events is the AASA annual ball that will be held in April 2003 and we hope this year will be just as it has been in the past

EXtremely Active

The NSSLHA is a national pre-professional organization for the master's candidates and undergraduate students interested in the study of normal and disordered human communication behavior. The University of Nevada, Reno has a local NSSLHA chapter, which is committed to providing information about the speech-Language Pathology and Audiology professions, assist the faculty in various projects, and participates in various activities socially and within the community.

Involvement in NSSLHA leads to a fuller appreciation of the profession of Speech-Language Pathology and Audiology and a greater awareness of the issues affecting these fields.

Throughout the academic year we hold monthly meetings and occasionally, two meetings per month.

NSSLHA has guest speakers come and talk with its members about our fields of interests. We also assist UNR's Speech Language Pathology and Audiology Clinic in many activities such as the Clinic Holiday Event. In the fall 2002 semester, NSSLHA participated in numerous activities such as the Walk to Cure Diabetes in Reno, Nevada that took place on our campus on October 13, 2002. We sponsored walkers to raise money for the Juvenile Diabetes research Foundation in the name of a child named Caleb.

International Affairs Club (IA)

International Affairs Club (IA) Strives to promote cultural awareness and support activities and events which encourage an international environment both on and off campus. In addition, the International affairs club provides a number of scholarships for Model United Nations students to travel to the annual Model United Nations Conference. Our biggest on campus event is the International Affairs club's Night of All Nations.

Student Ambassadors

Student Ambassadors is a diverse group of individuals that actively recruits students for the University of Nevada. Being part of our family entail giving campus tours, attending high school college fairs, and going on Fall Previews. The fun doesn't stop there! We also do community outreach projects, such as a reading challenge at local elementary schools, a community food drive, and an elementary Pen Pals Program that encourages reading and writing at an early age. We also sponsor fun events such as Campus Ghost Tours, Winter & Summer Retreats, and our Final Event. It's all about family!

Reorganization

Talk of 2002-2003

The elimination of the Mackay school of Mines as its own college is part of President Lilley's and UC reorganization plan now in its second year of review. Realizing that the plan will be final this year the students, both graduate and undergraduate, faculty, and community members protested the thought of no more Mackay School of Mines College. Under the new plan it would go under a college of science. Over sixty people joined this protest that was held at the quad by the Mackay Statute.

Exercising Your Mind

College is the open market place of ideas. Students come here to expand their knowledge and their intellect. The great thing about college is that students have the ability to pick their own field of interest and study that almost exclusively. Every student has the ability to be great at something and college allows students to explore many different areas of interest so students may choose the one that they are most passionate about and want to do for the rest of their lives.

Sabrina Darrow a senior Psychology major says "I just picked my major this year." "I was undecided for most of time in college, however, that experience allowed me to really find the field of interest that was best for me." Like Sabrina many students choose to go the general education route and find it to be very beneficial. For instance Nicole Porter a senior General Education major explains, "There are simply too many areas that I am interested in and I don't want to limit my learning experience by choosing only one topic of study."

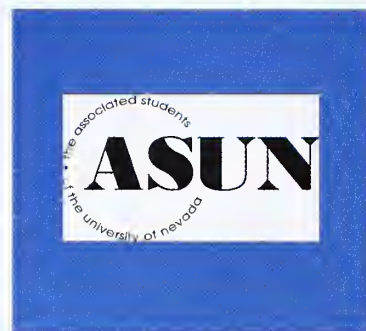

With so much to learn about in such little time General Education degree allows students to pursue as many avenues as possible in order to find their exact niche in the world. Especially when college is the time that students are able to learn outside of the box of high school education and are able to express their own thought and beliefs more freely.

The Leaders of the Pack

It takes a certain kind of student to want to run for a position on the Senate, the Executive, or any of the many boards that exist at UNR. These students dedicate a large portion of their time to deal with issues that are pressing to the University and most importantly the student body. These individuals chose to sacrifice their time

Sagebrush

The University of Nevada's newspaper was founded in 1893 over the protests of the Board of Regents, as The Student Record. The Sagebrush has served as a source of news, information and advertisements for local bars since 1910. The 2002-2003 Sagebrush was the students' first source for information on several important events, including university reorganization; the untimely death of Albert Jerome Refuerzo Santos; the loss of Travis Linn; the resignation of Dean John Mead and the dismissal of Dean Jane Long.

Artemisia

Working on the yearbook for the past two years has taught me a lot about creating creativity carefully. This was a genuinely unique experience for me that has taught me a lot about people and expectations. However, through the whole ordeal I have come to realize that I have created a book of this years memories for all who dareth hold it close enough to absorb its magical power. During all of my trials and tribulations as the editor and chief of the Artemisia, I was not completely alone. I owe a great amount of thanks to Amy for dealing with all the odds and ends that go along with publishing a book. Thank you so much Amy, I couldn't have done it without you. You have helped lead me to victory. Also, Dylan Shaver for helping me during all of my computer and mental meltdowns. Thank you. Thank you to Jolie Lynn Alhadeff for some fantastic photography. Thanks to the athletic office and the Western Athletic Conference for the fabulous sports photos in the book. Thank you Zach Silver for the brainstorming sessions we had to figure out a theme.. Thanks to Sabrina Michelle Darrow for helping me out of my last desperate moments of finishing the book. Thanks to Nicole Nazarechuk for being a princess. And to the Michiganesian for the help during the summer camp that helped to spark ideas for many layouts. Finally, thank you to all whom supported me and rallied to give me pictures and copy because without all you there is no book, especially Taylor Publishing for all of your tremendous contributions.

Cheers!

Wolf Pack Radio

The students of the University of Nevada once again have a radio station that it can call all its own. Wolfpack Radio was born early in the year 2001 to the proud parents of Jot Travis and A. Sun. After being abandoned by it's first set of parents, 5 young men found Wolfpack Radio and it was their dream to one day see Wolfpack Radio grown into a fine young radio station in the Reno area. Sean, Casey, Nick, Rich, and Kevin were the young men that found the radio station in utter shambles. After cleaning it up, and salvaging what was left of the young radio station, the men put the station on a strict diet of Alternative music, college shenanigans, and a little TLC. After several months Wolfpack Radio turned into a small Internet radio station. Continuing it's steady diet of Alternative music mixed in with a little Hip-Hop, and even the occasional Techno song, Wolfpack Radio grew into a radio powerhouse at the University of Nevada. Now Wolfpack Radio can be heard on the airwaves in the Reno area on the AM band at 1700. Casey and Kevin are the only remaining original members from the original crew, but up and comers like Caleb, Jordan, Navgeet, James and Lou are making sure that the ship stays afloat. So, when you turn your radio dial and there is nothing to be heard, just click the band over to AM, and listen to the radio powerhouse that is Wolfpack Radio. Congratulations to the class of 2003, Keep on Rockin'.

BRUSHFIRE

This year marks the 53rd year of this important publication.

This past year at the Brushfire was an exceptional endeavor. In all honesty, I was hired as editor with zilch for prior experience. Every move, from turning on a Macintosh to editing a final proof, required me to learn something new. I owe a great debt to the entire Sagebrush Staff, who was often subjected to my pleas for help. I also owe a great deal of gratitude to Amy Koeckes for acting as an all knowing Publication

Goddess-even if she didn't want to. The Brushfire is an extremely important outlet at this University. The ability to express oneself creatively deserves significant recognition and respect. My only hope is that all the contributors feel the Brushfire provided such a medium. Sincerely & with best wishes,

ASUN Elections

Campaigning, Debating, and Voting

The A.S.U.N elections are a time for students that are eager to represent their student body, hit the campus with signs, flyer, and shirts. This is all in an attempt to persuade the University students to believe in their plight and vote them into a student government position. The tactics used by candidates, however, differs from student to student. Some like to use traditional techniques and sway the voters by simply name recognition. Others choose the humorous route and run their campaign on funny slogans and catch phrases. No matter what the technique, election time is always quite chaotic and entertaining.

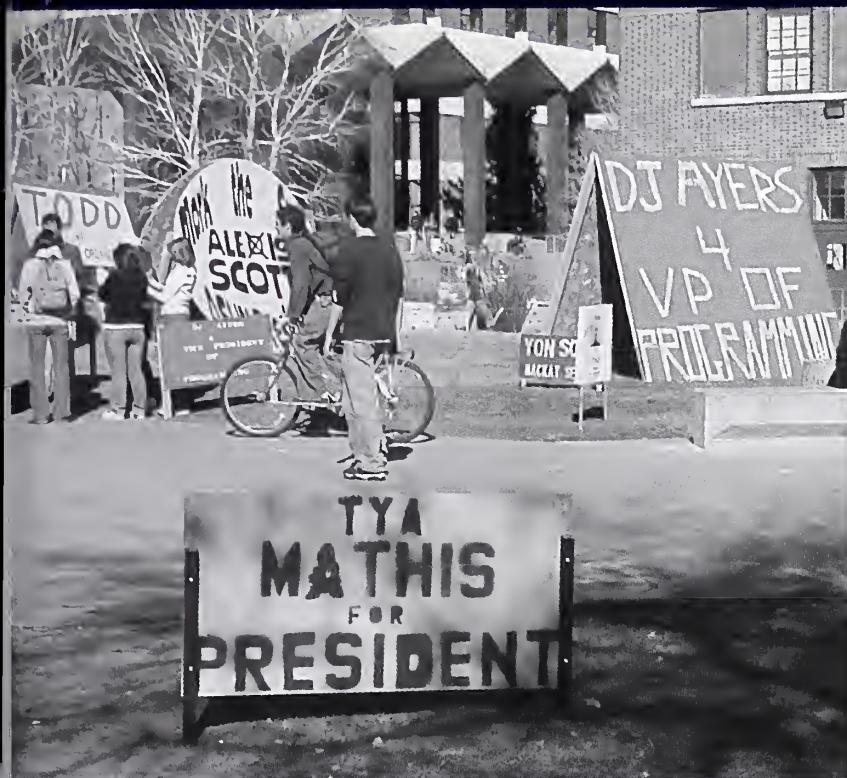

Erin Lankowsky makes his vote count by casting his ballot in the JTSU.

The ASUN elections board tries to keep up with 1,200 plus voters this year

It is that time of year again where you see all of the signs all over the campus.

All kinds of visible campaigning was present throughout the two days of elections

Some candidates were more creative with their advertising.

All organizations must come together

With all the things that are going on at the University at any given time there are plenty of issues to deal with. From Greeks to fiscal allocations, students serve on boards and committees to ensure that all University activities run smoothly and that all groups are working together with cohesion. IFC and Panhellenic are groups comprised of members from each of the fraternities and the sororities. They meet weekly to discuss all issues concerning the unity of all the greek houses and activities to ameliorate the University from campus clean up to a number of charities that they sponsor.

There is also the Fiscal Allocations Board that meets on a bi-weekly basis to make sure that all the clubs, organizations, publications and anything else sponsored by ASUN has sufficient funds to run flawlessly.

It's All Greek To Me!

Members of all the Greek community joined together to honor their best

---

The Greek system at the University of Nevada, Reno provides students with an opportunity to get involved in University activities as well as allowing them to engage in various community service programs that benefit the community. This year the Greek organization all participated in the All Greek Ball held downtown. At the All Greek Ball each house nominated their members for numerous awards.

Among these awards were Greek Athlete of the year and Greek Scholar of the year.

ΣΠΕ

The men of Sigma Phi Epsilon continuously strive for excellence in leadership, academics, athletics and community service. Our chapter has been a growing force at the University of Nevada since our establishment in 1997, and today our members are proud to be a part of the #1 fraternity both on this campus and across the country. SigEp is the nation's largest fraternity with over 240,000 members and alumni. We are an organization that offers countless opportunities for members during their college years and long after graduation. Our mission is to "Build Balanced Leaders for the World's Communities," which we aim to accomplish by assisting members in the development of a sound mind and a sound body.

Following a great year in 2001-2002, the Nevada Alpha chapter of SigEp came into the fall semester with extreme energy and a strong desire for achievement. After a huge success with fall recruitment, our chapter continued its efforts to grow and expand upon its involvement across campus and the surrounding community. We went on to win several awards at the All Greek Ball, including the "Best Chapter" award for the second year in a row, the highest tangible honor within the Nevada Greek community. We also won the prestigious "Silver and Blue Cup" this year for our diligent and motivated participation in all Homecoming festivities.

The Spring 2003 semester progressed with no abandon after we hosted SigEp's annual regional conference right here in Reno. It was truly a memorable moment for our chapter. As SigEps, we take pride in our reputation as gentlemen, our consistent top standing achievements in academics, our involvement in the community, and our competitive participation in campus intramural sports. Our members are active in many different student organizations, and several have attained elite campus leadership positions within ASUN. There is certainly much to speak about our recent past, but there is even more to expect of our future. SigEp has much to look forward to in the coming years, and we are ready to face any exciting challenges that may be in store.

TKE

Today, TKE remains one of the most active fraternities on the UNR campus. We are constantly involved in school and community service projects, activities with other fraternities and sororities, and inter-athletic competition. Each work hard not only to community we live, learn but to invite others to join lifelong commitment to brotherhood.

Pi-Iota Chapter constantly strives to be the best fraternity at UNR and among the best chapters of Tau Kappa Epsilon. Please contact us if you are interested in learning more about joining The Fraternity for Life.

The Ladies of Delta Delta Delta know how to have a good time and are very active in the greek community with things like the Greekathalon.

We Will Never Forget

The effects of September 11th can be seen every where today. People all over America have taken an extra effort to show their support for the country they love. Today in 2003, it is very common place to see individuals everywhere sporting the red, white, and blue that stands for freedom. This year the Nevada Alpha Chapter of Pi Beta Phi showed their appreciation for their country during Recruitment week in the fall. They, along with their fellow Greeks the illustrious ladies Delta Gamma, also commemorated the anniversary of the tragic event of the previous fall with a candle passing.

IntermiX

This year the Greek system is beginning steps to further unite its members. IFC and Panhellenic are initializing their "Ninety to One Hundred" plan. It's about getting back to the basics of what the system stands for and boosting involvement in the community (including alumni relations). One of the first steps taken was to start a tradition of an All Greek Ball this fall semester.

ΠΔΤ

Not many people can truly define brotherhood. Most associate it with their own siblings; however, brotherhood as related to actual kinship is impure—it is mixed with the influences of social compulsion and parental intervention. On the contrary, true brotherhood is devoid of outside influences. It is pristine and without obligation to anyone outside of the relationship. It is the unbiased choice to fully commit to another person. Such is the basis of the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity.

We are a fraternity that puts its emphasis on brotherhood. We are individuals, yet we are bound by a single set of principles: Friendship, Sound Learning, and Moral Rectitude. We come from the most diverse locations and most profuse upbringings. We are jocks, punks, nerds, and the gamut between. We listen to everything from AFI to Aqua. We play all sports from football to ultimate Frisbee. We are beyond any single label (that is, aside from gentlemen).

Graduates

Our time at the University gave us some of the best experiences of our lives. Looking back over our college careers, we were reminded of the people who changed our lives, the classes we aced and the games that kept us on our feet

After three yeras of wait-lists, early morning classes, late registration days and staying home to study, we are finally able to go out late during the week, sleep in, and take the classes we really wanted.

While some of us worried about what the future held, others had never been more certain of anything as they decided to spend the rest of their lives together.

We made every moment of our senior year a special one, and we reminisced about some of the crazier things we had done as an undergraduate.

With a bit of sadness in our hearts, we attended our last game, our last lecture, and our last party at the University.

We came here four years ago uncertain of what laid ahead. Over the course of our "Reno Experience" we made friends to last a lifetime, gained an education inside and outside the classroom, created memories that will never fade, and we found ourselves.

Educational EXcellence

The time has arrived, the gowns have been purchased, and graduation applications have been approved. With all of the factors in place there is nothing left to do eXcept take that scary walk down the aisle. Graduates are overwhelmed with so many emotions: scared, happy, nervous, and broke. The question of the next step is flowing through everyone's mind as they face the end of one chapter of their lives and prepare for the challenge of the next chapter.

Everyone is proud of you all and is rooting for your success. Now go out and share your knowledge with the rest of the world and know that the good ol' days are not over...our lives are just beginning...Now go and seize the day!

You may have a college degree, but can you answer these crazy riddles?

1. My cousin Mary dropped an earring in her coffee, but the earring did not get wet. How could this be?
2. I have found a book where the forward comes after the epilogue, the end is in the first half of the book, and the index comes before the introduction. What book is it?
3. What is so fragile that when you say its name you break it?
4. Why do black sheep eat less grass than white sheep?
5. What animal walks on all fours in the morning, on two legs at noon, and on three legs at dusk?
6. I climbed up a cherry tree, where I found cherries. I did not pick cherries, nor did I leave cherries. How can you explain this?
7. Among my siblings I am the thinnest. I am in Paris, but I am not in France. Who am I?
8. I can only live when there is light, although I die if the light shines on me. What am I?
9. It sings and has ten feet. What is it?
10. What can an elephant do that no other animal can?

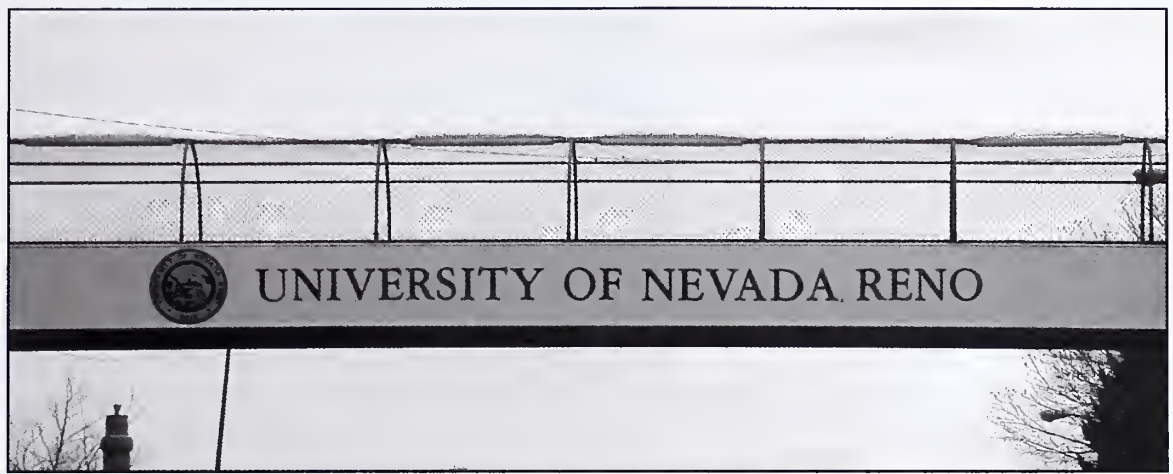

Our year was one of many changes.

Construction and renovations were common all over campus. Also the President of the University announced that he had a new plan for the University that includes a library, new student union, more parking, and a new quad area to keep the University up to date.

Extremely Cheesy

A man walks into a bar. He looks at the voluptuous blonde seated next to him and asks innocently, "Why don't you sit on my lap, and we'll talk about the first thing that pops up?" She giggles joyously, and they go home together.

Yeah right! Pick up lines can be one of the most cheesiest elements in our modern societies social scene. Skanky men approach tube topped nightclub tramps and ask them if their father stole the stars out of the sky or if they are an angel that just happened to fall from the heavens. In maybe one out of ten million cases, the women actually take the bait and offers and dance- or perhaps more. But more often than not pick up line simply do not work.

"Pick-up lines are a big turnoff," says Christi Coffman, a junior. "Guys say stuff like 'What's your name? Can I take a shower with you?' It's so gross. The worst part is that you know he's tried the same line on at least half of the girls in the place."

"Why do people think that pick-up lines are sexy?" said Elizabeth Stoltz. "Guys use these terrible worn out lines."

Guys aren't the only ones that are on the lookout for a mate, however; women often approach guys in the hope of kindling a quick romance, or maybe just for some flirting entertainment.

Women twirl their hair and reveal some leg then offer subtle, innocuous questions like, "Do you come here often?" or "Did you see the soccer game last night?" to lure men in.

There are few distinct types of pick-up lines. The outrageously forward ("Nice shoes, wanna fuck?") works in some cases, whereas a more clever line ("Do you believe in love at first sight or should I walk by again?") gets a laugh and may make you look mildly sweet. Sometimes a bizarre comment works best, like "Your so hot you melt the plastic on my underwear." Then there are the disgustingly graphic lines that are best suited for the extremely drunk: "You have over 200 bones in your body. Want another?"

"That shirt looks really nice on you, but it would look much better crumpled up on my bedroom floor"

Coming of Legal Age

Bar rituals and new privileges make for interesting nights

21

After years of begging friends to “buy” for them narrowly dodging the MIP’s, turning 21 was a major milestone for many college students. And luckily, Reno was definitely not at a loss of options for those looking to properly celebrate their introduction into legal drinking.

Senior international affairs major Nicole Nazarechuk spent her 21 at the new “hot-spot” Dick and Janes. “I just kept consuming shot after shot, I was trying to take all 21 shots that are required of every individual coming of age”, Nicole remembered. “By the time I got to number 15 then I stopped keeping count.”

Senior journalism major Chrissy Klenke recalls wearing foolish glasses and going to all the popular places downtown. “The only thing I remember is all the blowjobs I did that night ( the shot of course)”, Chrissy giggled. “Every bartender we told it was my 21st just made me drink one of those at every single place we went, and I took all of them like the champion drinker that I am.”

Always something to do around our school...

The ASUN Programming Board puts on many activities for University students to partake in. They bring many celebrity faces and bands to entertain everyone. Margaret Chow came to the Lawlor Events Center and had everyone practically in tears with her views on diets and homosexuality. She really used the time not only to make people laugh but also to make people think about the way they live their lives and the beliefs many individuals in society hold. It was much more than comedy, it was a human rights rally as well.

Also members of the Real World cast were brought to talk about living with roommates and other things. There really was no point to bring them, they are only real people that were on to MTV to have their private lives taped for the world. They had nothing really significant or profound to tell anyone and then they sold pictures of themselves. Not the greatest but still semi-entertaining.

Flipside manages to always have a band come and play at some point. These bands are usually very energetic and a lot of fun to watch. Students all gather together either at lunch or at night to feel the musical styling of a new band and totally rock to the beats.

Giving their best. This band "no use for a name" performs for students in the quad with energy.

Students line up early to support the band "no use for a name."

Barralls of laughs. After her comedy show, Margaret Chow poses with a student and signs her autograph.

Rock 'n' Roll. At the Wolf's Perk some local guitarists show off what they can do.

Out and About

For students the reality of no longer being undergraduates, career-planning services offered by the University are extremely helpful. It was invented to not only connect graduating seniors with employment opportunities but also advisors are on hand to help each and every student who walked through their doors needing help.

Graduation Blues

They discuss a range of concerns such as: choosing a major, career options, job search strategies, interviewing, applying to graduate and other professional schools, and many other things. They encourage internship programs and help all students in the right direction so each student can make the most out of their college experience and gain the most knowledge in their field during this time.

All you need is love

What to do about the opposite sex.

In a culture of messages that contradict each other- "All you need is love" against "work hard, play hard"-students had to decide for themselves how much time and effort they were willing to invest in the dating scene.

Dating attitudes seem to run the gamut: Some students prefer not to date at all, while others return to Reno thinking more about where their next hook-up was coming from rather than where their next aced exam was coming from.

For those students looking to find that "special someone" options abounded.

In the fall, first-year students often date peers in their dorms or traveled to frat parties. Once those possibilities are exhausted, having a network of established friends seemed to be one the most popular ways for students to meet new people and potential significant other.

The first few weeks of the fall semester, with nicer weather and lighter homework, created an atmosphere where love, if one was willing to look for it was in the air. "When you first get back to school there is less work and more partying. Pretty much it is the time to meet new people and find somebody comfortable for the busy season," said Kate Ellen a sophomore biochemistry student.

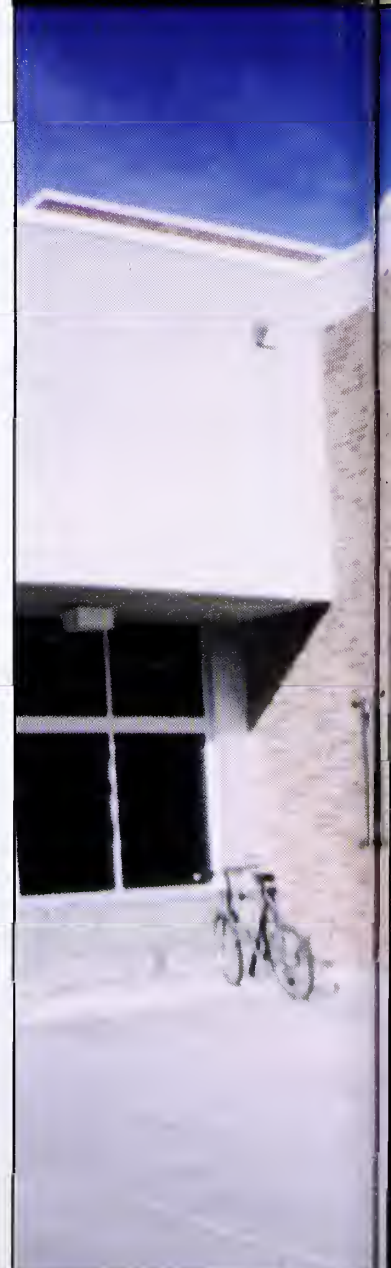

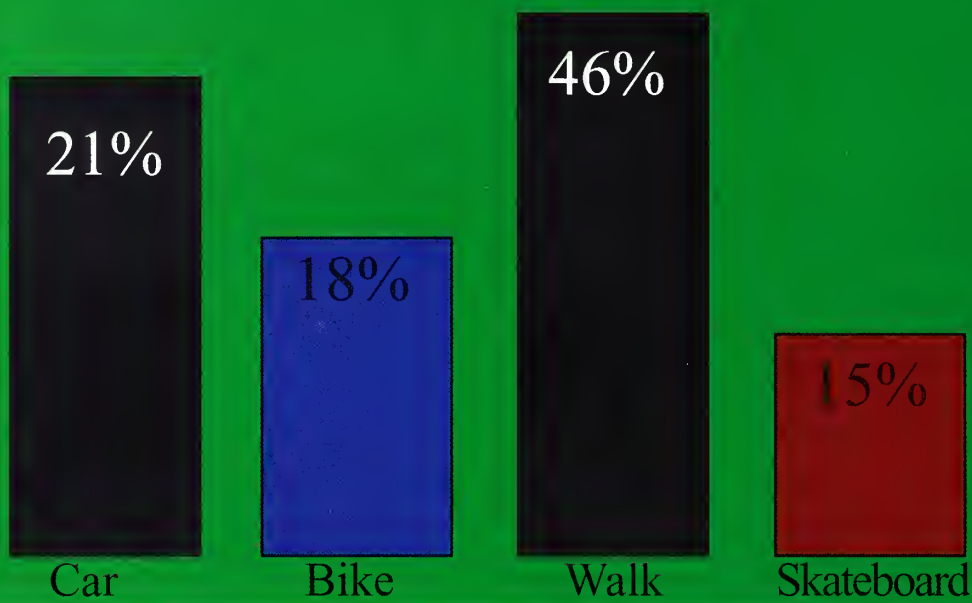

In a school with 15,000 intelligent attractive and diverse students it was hard not to meet new people and be interested in them. Although there were some unusual methods of meeting significant others, for some the venues where the same: classes, housing, bars and parties. These appear to be the common avenues for the love-lorn to take in the quest for companionship. For those students already attached, Reno offered a variety of options for dates, including great restaurants, movie theaters, and a multitude of outdoor places to be alone.

Of course everyone was different, and therefore dating and meeting new people at the University was a complex and unique experience. While some students felt the need for a relationship in order to have someone to "hang out" with all the time, others felt that being social with friends provided all the fun and companionship they needed- without the pressures of the dating scene, first dates, and awkward silences.

Campus Wheels?

Boot 'em up! This student watches as the Parking Services put a boot on this car. Obviously she has a problem with not filling the meter enough.

Hello spaces. Recently the University replaced apartments with these parking spots to make parking less of a problem for students.

Exhausting Search for Parking

Parking at the University is not the most pleasant experience have a waiting list that resembles War and Peace and the bad the parking passes are so far that it is faster for many to just walk from their houses. Then there is everyone's favorite campus employees-Parking Services that can't help but piss hundreds of people off daily, because they were one second late on his or her meter. Ticket after ticket is given day in and day out. If one deals with their tickets appropriately and in a timely fashion there are really no terrible repercussions to face from merely a couple of tickets. However, if one chooses not to deal with them and they just keep accumulating, that is when Parking Services pulls out the boots.

A boot on your car can be very devastating but in all actuality it takes about twenty tickets to get a boot on your car. So let's face it you should have learned your lesson. "Last year I paid a total $525 to Parking Services in tickets and I never thought they would really put a boot on my car," said Jolie Alhadeff a senior journalism major that has been booted. "I just got "I just got ticket after ticket until they gave the boot then I changed my ways."

"Trying to find a spot is ridiculous so you think after 20 tickets, you'd learn your lesson."
-Jolie Alnadeff

"The parking nazis gets me every single time!"
-Katie Montgomery

Just anywhere-often times the parking lot is full so some students choose to just park anywhere.

Boots and Boots and More Boots. Some people can never learn to park legally.

Mayhem After Midnight

Social events were a major part of the school year at the University, but sometimes the most interesting occurrences came after the party was already over. Walks home from large parties became an adventure of it's own.

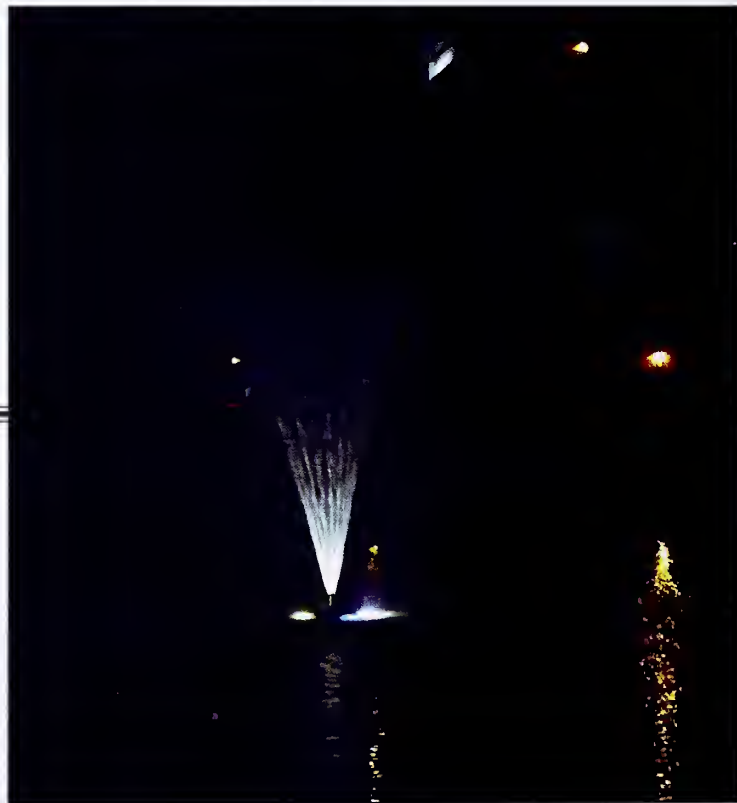

Biochemistry major Kristi Wise remembers walking nearly two miles after a party. "There was about fifteen people all walking home from this three kegger party," she laughed. "We were all so drunk we didn't even seem to notice that we were being snowed on."

"I had to get carried home one night by my purse strap," said Sara Ellis a senior education major. "One of my friends from high school and my roommate held onto my purse strap as my feet stayed limped and dragged across the ground."

"One time after embarking on a drunken feast at the Wildwood restaurant in the Gold Dust West Casino we decided to race to our house that was about three blocks away," said Nick Bennett a senior journalism major. "In the midst of our drunken run one of my roommates stole a sign, the other one fell and cut his hand, and finally we were chased in the door by a terrifyingly huge dog," Nick said.

Extraordinary Drunken Debauchery!

The night life in Reno can be pretty crazy. In a 24 hour town there is always something going on and something crazy to see. Every night the sky is illuminated with neon lights and flashy signs.

Ensuring the students safety the University Senators comb the campus for missing lights and sub-par lighting areas so that student can feel a little safer as they walk around campus at night.

Hungry? Don't Wait

Students that live off-campus can't always go home for a bite to eat in between classes so they must resort to whatever the University has to offer them. In this case the taco stand that is located in the business building

New territory.

The Student Services building is making positive strides in the direction of healthier school food with their new sandwich/coffee shop that is located on the first floor for all student's.

The food that is available to students on campus is far from being the best health choice

Excessive Weight Gain

For almost as long as there have been freshmen, there have been dreaded stories about the "freshmen 15" that notorious addition of 15 pounds or more to the typical freshmen weight between September and May. But all you freshmen out there don't need to panic. Just because you are a first year student doesn't mean you have to gain weight

The causes of the "freshmen 15" are easy to spot. Walk into any dining hall and the temptation is spread out before you: Cheesy pizza, tater-tots, ice cream, and various desserts. Add to these choices late night snacking and an increase consumption of beer, and weight gain is not surprising.

But controlling weight is up to you, and it begins with the choices you make at mealtime. With so many tasty choices before them in all-you-can-eat cafeterias, many students find themselves choosing their meals based on what they can fit on their trays. Don't fall into that trap

Most UNR students chow excessively at mealtimes because they take a serving of everything that appeals to them. "I know it's hard because of the variety available," said Brittany Van Cleve a freshmen, "but if they just asked for smaller portions it would probably help out a lot." Other for fun and entertainment, "McKay suggests.

But tired and stressed students not only eat a lot- they also eat for instant gratification rather than long term health. "Individuals don't have their food monitored in college," said Mary McKay a UCLA Medical Center chief clinical dietician. "They can say, 'Oh gee, I can have ice cream for breakfast just because it is there.'"

Finding the willpower to refuse high calorie meals is not easy. Salad or cheeseburger, cheeseburger or salad? The burger is tempting and often wins out over the healthier salad. "When people are unsure about themselves, or are lonely and have other anxieties, there is a number of them who will turn to food and eat," McKay says. She adds that freshmen are more likely to be susceptible to such apprehension. Eating is also a good procrastination activity – a perfect complement to a late night study session. Midnight is synonymous with munchies time. "Instead of eating, look to each other for entertainment."
